

Docket No.: 4049/019

IN THE UNITED STATES PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE

Applicant	:	Peter Leonard Hutchison
Serial Number	:	10/821,902
Filing Date	:	April 9, 2004
Title	:	FLUE CLEANER
Examiner	:	Cephia D. Toomer
Group Art Unit	:	1797

DECLARATION BY PETER LEONARD HUTCHISON UNDER 37 C.F.R. §1.132

I, Peter Leonard Hutchison, declare the following:

1. I am the sole inventor of the invention disclosed and claimed in the above-identified patent application. I am an Australian citizen, and my residence is 19 Frances Road, Gelorup, WA 6230, Australia.

2. I am a qualified Industrial Chemist with a Bachelor of Science degree in Chemistry that I obtained from the West Australian Institute of Technology (now known as Curtin University of Technology) in 1970. I have spent most of my 30-year working life as the Station Chemist at two coal-fired electrical generating stations located in the Australian state of Western Australia, and as such I was responsible for the overall chemical operation of both power stations. I also developed a very successful private environmental consultancy business called SouthWest Chemical Services, which I sold in 2004.

3. I am the founder and Managing Director of Smart Burn Pty Ltd ("Smart Burn"), an Australian company which I now operate on a full time basis, and which has rights in the subject invention. The web site of the company may be accessed at www.smartburn.com.au. Smart Burn manufactures and sells a flue cleaning device in accordance with the invention that is marketed in Australia under the trademark "SmartBurn."

4. The "SmartBurn" flue cleaning device removes undesirable deposits from the flue or chimney of a fuel-burning (particularly a wood-burning) stove or fireplace resulting from combustion of the fuel. The device comprises an enclosed container having an opening providing restricted communication between the interior and exterior thereof, the enclosed container being formed of a non-combustible heat resistant material for placement in a fuel burning stove or fireplace, the interior of the enclosed container containing a sacrificial soot removal agent which is melted and then vaporized when heated by the fire in the stove or fireplace so as to generate cleaning vapors, the enclosed container and the opening being sized and shaped to exhaust the vapors from the enclosed container so as to clean the flue of the stove or fireplace.

5. Since its commercial introduction in 2005, the "SmartBurn" flue cleaning device has gained wide acceptance and approval. As of June 25, 2009, Smart Burn had sold more than 55,000 units of the device, which represents sales of approximately 1,500,000 Australian dollars. Attached as Exhibit A is a spreadsheet showing sales of the "SmartBurn" device on an annual basis, both in units and in Australian dollars. This spreadsheet demonstrates a significant and steady annual growth in the popularity and success of the "SmartBurn" device since 2007, and the same is also illustrated pictorially in the bar graphs that accompany the spreadsheet, depicting separately, and year by year, the unit sales figures and the dollar sales figures, respectively. It should be noted that the most recent sales figures have been tabulated only through June 25, 2009, but that sales of the device are expected to be equally strong after July 1, 2009, that is, into my company's next fiscal year, and until the sales of this seasonal product begin to decline near the end of July as, in the southern hemisphere, the current winter heating season draws to a close. The company projects continuing growth in sales over the next five years and beyond, with the great majority of such sales occurring in the months of April through July.

6. The spreadsheet set forth in Exhibit A also tabulates the number of retail outlets in Australia and in New Zealand that were actively selling the "SmartBurn" device in the years since its introduction in 2005, and attached as Exhibits B and C are lists of those specific retail outlets in Australia and New Zealand, respectively, specifying their names and geographic locations. These exhibits, which were prepared based upon my personal knowledge, indicate that through June 23, 2009, there were almost 700 retail outlets in Australia, and just over 100 in New Zealand, that were featuring and selling this highly successful product.

7. A summary of the unsolicited media coverage which the "SmartBurn" device has received in Australia is also set forth in Exhibit A, indicating that the device has been featured in print media, as well as in television news coverage and in other television programming in Australia (such as programs devoted to highlighting successful businesses and programs devoted to highlighting new inventors and their inventions). This summary, which was prepared based upon my personal knowledge, demonstrates that the "SmartBurn" has enjoyed a steady stream of media coverage, the amount of which has increased significantly each year since the product was introduced in 2005.

8. Attached as Exhibit D is a listing of awards and achievements that have been earned by the "SmartBurn" device through June 22, 2009, some of which were presented to me personally (as the inventor), while others were presented to my company, Smart Burn. The list was prepared based upon my personal knowledge of these awards. Copies of the documents and/or certificates associated with a representative sample of these awards from each of the calendar years 2004-2009 are attached as Exhibits E-M. The "SmartBurn" device is now, and since 2004 has been, the only commercial product of my company Smart Burn, and all of these awards are attributable to that product.

9. The widespread acceptance of the "SmartBurn" device has been due, in no small measure, to its efficacy, which has been demonstrated in objective testing conducted by an independent, authoritative third party. Specifically, attached as Exhibits N and O are, respectively, a 1-page, signed test report summary, dated December 15, 2003, and the entire supporting 13-page test report, also dated December 15, 2003, both of which were prepared by the AHHA Testing Laboratory (a division of the Australian Home Heating Association, Inc. or "AHHA", whose web site may be accessed at www.homeheat.com.au), located in Thebarton, in the neighboring Australian state of South Australia, attesting to measurements made of the particulate emissions, power output and successful general operation and efficiency of a "SmartBurn" flue cleaning device in the flue pipe of a typical, medium-sized, fan-forced, wood-burning convection heater.

10. This testing came about because the Department of Environment, an agency of the government of Western Australia (the Australian state in which I live and work), recommended to me that independent testing of my flue cleaning device be conducted by an unbiased, qualified analytical laboratory authority. They suggested that the testing be conducted by the AHHA Testing Laboratory, since the latter is one of only two testing laboratories in all of Australia that is qualified as having NATA Certification of Laboratory Testing (a certification recognized in the courts of law, both in Australia and globally) for domestic wood heaters. The testing was conducted in 2003 at my own expense, costing approximately 11,000 Australian dollars.

11. The AHHA test report summary of Exhibit O shows that the "SmartBurn" flue cleaning device produced an average reduction of 37% in particulate emissions (indicating higher combustion efficiency of the convection heater), as well as a 6% increase in the power output of the heater on the high setting, and most significantly, an observable change in the condition of the flue pipe, namely, "a complete conversion of the black/brown soot and creosote deposits into fine white ash..." These test results leave no doubt as to the efficacy of the "SmartBurn" device, which has, in turn, led to its widespread appeal in the marketplace and its commercial success.

I hereby declare that all statements made herein of my own knowledge are true, and that all statements made herein on information and belief are believed to be true; and I further declare that these statements were made with the knowledge that willful false statements and the like so made are punishable as perjury, and that any such willful false statements may jeopardize the validity of this application or any patent issued thereon.

APPENDIX A

Calorimeter Room

The AHHA calorimeter room is an insulated room of internal dimensions 2800 x 2650 x 2400mm.

Air flow into the room is from a manually controlled variable speed blower. Air flow out of the room is via a 150mm duct with four circular openings. The duct is connected to a variable speed fan.

Air flow air temperatures are measured by five type K thermocouples in both the inlet and outlet ducts. Air velocity of the outlet is measured by pitot tube connected to inclined manometer and pressure differential transducer.

The heater sits on Mercury 0-250kg digital scales. The flue system consists of an oil bath that isolates the weight of the heater from the rest of the flue. The flue, where it exits from the room, passes into an insulated flue casing. Total flue length above the top of the scales is set at  $4.6 \pm 0.1$ m.

Temperatures and transducer signals are fed to a data logger that is connected to a computer. A digital signal from the scales is also sent to the computer.

The calorimeter room heat losses through the walls have been measured from electrical resistance heaters of known output.

During operation, airflow into the room is adjusted to maintain the air pressure in the room at atmospheric pressure.

Data is collected from thermocouples, air flow and scales weight every two minutes.

1. INTRODUCTION

Peter Leonard Hutchison contracted AHHA Testing Laboratory to assess the performance of a flue cleaning device with a typical freestanding wood burning heater to AS/NZS4013:1999 and AS/NZS4012:1999. The device is designed to self-clean the flue during the normal operation of a woodheater via a chemical reaction with the soot deposits. The fuel to be used was hardwood. The Flue Cleaning device is shown in Figure 1.

2. PROCEDURE

2.1 Samples

A typical medium sized fan-forced convection woodheater was selected for the test program. It was firebrick lined with preheated secondary air injected at the rear of the firebox and primary air directed down the front door glass. The heater model is certified to AS/NZS 4013:1999 for particulate emissions.

The flue cleaning device consisted of a hollow steel tube 150mm long, 30 to 60mm diameter with partially crimped ends containing the active ingredient (solid material). A material specification data sheet provided by South-West Chemical Services identified the active ingredient as a naturally occurring non-toxic material. Total mass was 280 grams.

2.2 Test procedure

Two tests were performed. The first test without the device fitted and the second with the device fitted.

Photographs were taken of the interior surface of the flue pipe before and after each series of test burn cycles during the first test. The flue pipe was prepared with a layer of soot (approx. 1mm thick) prior to the commencement of the tests.

For the second test the device was placed in the firebox on the firebrick base towards the back of the firebox. The device was weighed and photographs taken of the interior surface of the flue pipe before and after each series of test burn cycles.

AHHA's calorimeter room - emissions rig was used for testing. The calorimeter and emissions rig are described in Appendices A and B respectively.

Prior to the test series commencing, a number of equipment items were calibrated.

A preburn leak test was carried out on the heater. The heater was then fitted with a flue and operated on high burn for a minimum of sixteen hours to fully cure paint, dry out fire bricks etc. The leak test was repeated.

The firebox volume was then measured by the method described in AS/NZS 4012:1999. Fuel load was calculated from the firebox volume. Wood piece size was determined as was the number of fuel pieces making up the fuel load. A typical fuel load is shown in Figure 2.

The heater was then mounted in the calorimeter room on a set of scales and connected to a flue system<sup>1</sup> that met the requirements of the Standard regarding Power Output and Efficiency.

The heater was then operated at three different primary air settings via a single control air slide to give the required range of heat outputs:-

1. High - air setting fully open.
2. Low - air setting at the minimum setting.
3. Medium - air setting to give a cycle time midway between high and low, plus or minus 30 minutes.

For each air setting, a fire was lit in the appliance with paper and wood and a bed of embers built up. Where appropriate wood charcoal was added to speed up the process. When the bed of embers was 24 to 26% of the single fuel load, a pre-burn cycle was commenced. The appliance was operated in such a way as to ensure that conditions at the beginning of the test cycle and the end were similar. For low and medium settings the air control was set fully open until the fuel mass dropped by 20% of the single fuel load. At this point, the air control was set to the appropriate position to give the required burn rate.

At the end of the pre-burn cycle, the appliance was operated for at least three more cycles in which emission samples were collected. Emission sample recovery is described in Appendix C.

3.3 Uncertainty of Measurement Statement

- (a) As required by the standard, the uncertainty of measurement of power output at 5kW has been calculated and found to be less than  $\pm 5\%$  at a 95% confidence level (coverage factor = 2).
- (b) The uncertainty of measurement of the particulate emissions factor has been calculated and does not exceed  $\pm 4\%$  at a 95% confidence level (coverage factor = 2).

4. CONCLUSION

4.1 Emission performance

There was a reduction in particulate emissions of 50% on low setting, 24% on medium setting and 37% on high setting with the device fitted.

The appliance particulate emissions factor was reduced by 37%.

A reduction in particulate emissions indicates higher combustion efficiency.

4.2 Power output

The power output on the high setting was 0.6 kW higher with a corresponding faster burn rate. This equates to a 6% increase in power output with the flue cleaner installed.

No significant change occurred on the medium and low air settings.

4.4 Flue pipe condition

The interior surface of the flue pipe showed a complete conversion of the black/brown soot and creosote deposits into fine white ash on the high setting with the device fitted (approx. 9 hours burn time) for 90% of its length. The cooler top 10 % showed no observable change.

A new thin layer of black soot was deposited in the pipe during the medium and low settings with the device fitted (these followed the high setting).

The high, medium and low settings without the device fitted did not show any observable changes to the existing soot/creosote layer.

4.5 Flue Temperature

The flue gas temperature was measured at a point 450mm above the heater flue spigot.

Results are tabulated in the table below.

Air control setting	Average flue gas temperature (degree C)	Minimum flue gas temperature (degree C)	Maximum flue gas temperature (degree C)
Test 1 without cleaner:-
High	383	227	607
Medium	300	148	597
Low	249	151	595
Test 2 with cleaner:-
High	448	200	712
Medium	272	146	617
Low	238	136	630

4.6 Mass Loss Rate

The flue cleaning device lost 10 grams of mass during the 9 hours of operation on the high setting, i.e. loss rate of 1.1 grams/hour.

A total of 1 gram was lost during the 16 hours on medium and 25 hours on the low settings, i.e. loss rate of 0.024 grams/hour (24.4 milligrams/hour).

The weight loss stated above is the total loss from the mass of the steel casing (due to corrosion) and the active ingredient. They therefore do not directly relate to the actual consumption rate and life span of the active ingredient in the firebox.

4.7 Effect on Compliance to AS/NZS 4013

The particulate emission results were lower with the device fitted. It would not affect the woodheater's compliance to AS/NZS 4013 and would therefore be acceptable to the EPA in Australia.

APPENDIX B

Emissions Rig

The emissions rig consists of dilution tunnel including collection hood, pitot tube for air flow measurement, sampling train and extraction fan.

The sampling train consists of sample probe, double filter assembly including thermocouple, gas dryer, high volume air sampler pump, dry gas meter and flow meter.

Forty seven millimetre glass fibre filters that have been weighed are mounted in the filter assembly.

The pitot tube is connected to an inclined manometer and pressure differential transducer.

The dry gas meter has a digital pulsed output.

Data from thermocouples, transducer and dry gas meter are fed to a data logger that is connected to a computer. This information is collected at the same time as data from the calorimeter room.

Towards the end of the preburn cycle, the dilution tunnel extraction fan is turned on and the dilution tunnel hood is swung over the heater flue.

When a new cycle commences, the air sampler pump is turned on. This remains on until the end of the cycle. Sample flow rate and dilution tunnel flow rate are automatically controlled within specified ranges.

APPENDIX C

Sample Recovery

As stated in Appendix B, the sample train consists of a number of components including sample probe and double filters.

At completion of a test cycle, the filters are removed from the filter holders and placed in a desiccator for drying of moisture. Condensed and entrapped emissions from the sample probe and first filter support are washed with acetone into a glass beaker. The acetone washing is allowed to vaporise to dryness and the residue weight determined. The two dried filters are reweighed.

Emission weight is then determined by totalling weight increases from the two filters and the residue from acetone washings.
